AUTHOR INDEX

The following list includes all authors of entries in this bibliography, the term author implying either a person, institution, or corporate body. Dissertations and theses are listed by both the individual author's name, and the degree-granting university. In the absence of a designated author, the names of editors, or other key individuals are given to make the search for a particular work less difficult. Although names of all important people who have contributed to a publication are not listed here, every effort has been made to include their names in entries themselves, whether they wrote prefaces, or served as photographers, compilers, translators, artists, transcribers, designers, advisers, illustrators, etc.

Some individuals listed in the Author Index are also associated with publications they either did not author, or in which they played a subsidiary role. This information is indicated in entries, but their numbers are not included here. There are also examples in which prominent persons - not only authors - are treated as subjects, indicated either within the title of a work, or included in the annotation for it. Many of these names will be found in the Subject Index. Material of the bibliography is too dense, however, to have allowed for every name mentioned in an annotation to be included. The reader is encouraged to survey entries and their annotations carefully, and to go to original publications whenever possible.

SUBJECT INDEX

This index contains the names of people who are either the main subjects of entries, or who are mentioned in annotations. Many names are duplicated in the Author Index. A sincere attempt was made to include as many names as possible, but due to the enormous volume of data, absolute comprehensiveness cannot be claimed. The index covers: African musicology, bibliographies, countries, dance, discographies, ethnomusicology, instruments, languages, music styles and types, oral tradition, peoples, periodicals, poetry, popular music, regions, religions, songs, and more. In some ways the index serves also as a kind of glossary. Due to space limitations, a certain amount of compressing was necessary.
